

What I like	To make it perfect
Workshop exercise, discussion Real life example	Less presentation before exercise
The discussions & presentation of the problem cases	Have more confidence standing for the audience, you have a nice session!
Very nice experience sharing Forcing to out of the box thinking because we had to think beyond the possible situations in the cases	Add coming up with pros and cons to the assignment
Hans-on cases that were recognizable helped us into a good discussion	1 slide would have been enough
Lets you think about realistic problems in agile organizations	Instruct each team to present their solution in a visible (visual way?), like Vera's team did
Very useful discussions during the exercise and afterwards Awareness on real life examples Experienced speaker	Slides too full of text Case studies too generic: a lot of information that would have been relevant was not present => it was difficult to decide whether a solution could have worked in this situation Initial presentation too long, could have been shorter, leaving more space for the workshop without any drawback
To be able to speak within small groups and to share experience Case comes from reality	Having a perfect solution (or at least the solution that was implemented) of the given problems
Share with others different possibility for organizing teams to be more efficient
Good discussion and exchanged experience
Good format, lots of discussion Learning from each other	Come with extra bottlenecks to guide in good solution
